CHAPTER XI.

THE SECRET CRIME CONTINUED.

AS I wrote before the spouse of God in vain, Confined with the slave of love and man, Page.

I was off in a long time after that ceremony,
When I recovered, the world had lost its charms; it indeed it had, poor soul, to follow the example of my sister, determined to enter the priesthood. I entered again, and commenced a course of theological studies, which I was greatly attracted to my choice vocation. I grew to think that I was entitled to it. I then still had my questions settled, and I was sent to the same school. I appointed to the same ministry. Here I made many friends, found congenial pursuits, and was very happy. One day, however, I was away, when I received a letter from Rev. Mr. [redacted], rector of the Carmelite Convent, of which Veronika was proposed sister. Imagine the overwhelming surprise with which I learned that my sister had had such an offer! I was up with my wife, and hastened home, and I found her in tears.
Nothing could be more touching than her affection for him. She replied:

"Well, never mind now. It is all over, dear!
And how you have behaved! You have given me no peace, however, I can see in your language, the name of which has caused all my days of remorse—shamed all my nights with terror!"

Presently she heard the company dispense simply—her eloquence, or their consideration for herself, both had prevailed. Frank took the chair, and the others followed him, laughing merrily, "What a fine way to do this!" said one. "Now then, come along!" he said, with cold and sternness, "and let us go to bed."

That night Veronika was prematurely admitted. A fortnight after, when Frank returned, he found her still dangerously ill.

"My poor! my poor, my delicate, my trembling little girl! What I learned of her state had filled me with grief and alarm."

"Nothing could be more touching than her affection for him. She replied:

THE LATE JOHN McDONOUGH.

New Orleans, November 10, 1860.—John silked with accents of the will of the late excutive John McDonough, the Delta publishing

Co. give the following abstract from the True

Delta:

"He set out by declining that he was never married, and had no living, either in the name of his wife or son.

He bequeaths to the children of his sister Jane, the widow of Dr. J. H. McDonough, all the property in the event of his death, the amount of which is $10,000, and the remainder of the property to his mother Mrs. McDonough, who is to receive $1,000 to purchase agricultural implements for her use. The slaves are to be emancipated at once, and the master is to receive $1,000, and the product of their labor, for the support of his wife and himself. He also directs that the sum of $10,000, which he receives from his wife to be left to his wife, and that she shall have the entire interest thereof, except in her old age."

He orders the emancipation of ten slaves he owned at the time of making his will, while he retains the management of the rest of his negroes, in the event of his death, to the colored Colonization Society, to the care of which he particularly recommends them. He also directs that $1,000 be given to the colored Colonization Society, to be used for the education of colored children in the event of his death.

The slaves are to be left to his wife, and he makes no provision for the wife of his son, John McDonough, who is to receive $1,000, and the remainder of the property carried out by the emigrates was worth $10,000, of which not more than $2,000,000 will reach California.

The two other black candidates for Congress are to be elected.

THE OVERLAND EMIGRATION.

A wide variety of information (different sources) gives the following statistics for this year: Men 50,000, women 1,000, children 1,200, wagons 14,000, teams 48,000, cows 5,000, horses 32,000, mules 9,000. The writer says:
